“IMMIGRATION REFORM: THE PRESCRIPTION FOR AMERICA’S FUTURE”

Daniel T. Griswold, Adjunct Scholar,
Center for Trade Policy Studies, Cato Institute

The COVID Pandemic continues to hobble the U.S. economy with disrupted supply chains, labor shortages, and accelerated demographic decline. More than ever, Texas and the rest of the United States need market-based immigration reform to re-invigorate the economy and secure the nation’s demographic and fiscal health. The U.S. labor market needs higher-skilled workers, but also lower-skilled workers to fill essential jobs where labor shortages are most acute. Along with immigration reform, we need to re-open the U.S. economy to trade while improving education to equip native-born as well as immigrant workers to thrive in a more high-tech future.
